Choosing a Long-Term Care Residence

A visit guide: what to look for, what to ask, and where to find the data

Choosing a residence for yourself or a loved one is never easy. Visit more than once, at different times of day and on weekends. Talk with residents and families, and ask friends for their experiences. Then check the public data. Bring the checklist and questions with you on your visit. Use the links and QR codes below for research at home.

Research at home

Nursing homes

Which type of care?

Skilled nursing facilities (nursing homes) fit people who need most kinds of nursing care, or who need two or more staff to move in and out of bed. Assisted living residences fit people who need help with daily activities like bathing and dressing, or with managing medications (including insulin). They also provide housekeeping, laundry, transportation, activities, and meals. Some have secure units with special care for residents living with dementia. Rhode Island also has supportive residences for people with developmental disabilities and other special needs. They are not covered here.

What the data can tell you

Nursing homes

- Inspections. Surveyors cite deficiencies on a scale of A to L for how widespread and how harmful they were. G to I means actual harm. J, K, and L are "immediate jeopardy," the most serious. Look for fewer and less severe citations, and fewer substantiated complaints.
- Star ratings. Medicare gives each home 1 to 5 stars overall, plus separate stars for inspections, staffing, and quality measures. Complicated and imperfect, but a good place to start. Many deficiencies go uncited.
- Staffing. Look at total nursing hours per resident per day (nurses and nursing assistants combined). Higher means more hands on direct care. Residents with higher needs require more.
- Turnover. The share of nursing staff who leave each year. Lower turnover means more consistent care and usually happier staff.
- Ownership. Studies find that type of ownership affects quality of care.

Assisted living residences

- Inspections. The state Department of Health (RIDOH) inspects each residence every two years, and more often when it receives a complaint. There is no scale of severity, the rules are fewer, and Rhode Island does not fine residences for violations. Look for fewer deficiencies, fewer complaint investigations, and less severe findings.
- No star ratings. Assisted living is regulated by the state only, not by Medicare. The inspection reports are the only data available.
- Staffing. RIDOH does not track staffing ratios or turnover. The law requires only "sufficient" staff to meet residents' needs. Ask for the numbers yourself (see the questions).
- Bottom line. Use the inspection data as a starting point, then spend as much time as you can visiting and asking around.

Facility Visit Observation Checklist

Check the boxes as you walk through. Pay attention to what staff are doing before they notice you.

THE BUILDING

Good signs

- ☐ Warm, homey feel
- ☐ Residents can get outside
- ☐ Residents move easily through halls and common areas
- ☐ Activities calendar is posted and followed
- ☐ Well ventilated, with reasonable noise
- ☐ Rooms are tidy and furnished with residents' own belongings
- ☐ Shared community animals (dogs, cats, birds, fish)

Warning signs

- ☐ Feels like an institution
- ☐ Call lights blinking, beeping, or on for long stretches
- ☐ Broken equipment, or hazards residents can reach
- ☐ Overflowing trash or laundry bins
- ☐ Loud or inappropriate noise (music, TV, intercom)
- ☐ Strong odors of urine, feces, disinfectant, or chemicals
- ☐ Slippery, sticky, or gritty floors
- ☐ Too hot or too cold for residents

THE STAFF

Good signs

- ☐ Staff wear name badges
- ☐ Staff smile at residents
- ☐ Staff use residents' names and speak pleasantly and respectfully
- ☐ Staff knock and wait for permission before entering rooms

Warning signs

- ☐ Staff talking or texting on phones while on duty
- ☐ Residents yelling with no staff response
- ☐ Staff chatting with each other and ignoring residents
- ☐ Staff speak to residents in a demanding, dismissive, or unpleasant tone
- ☐ Staff talk about residents in front of them

THE FOOD

Good signs

- ☐ Food looks and smells appetizing and nutritious
- ☐ Menu is posted and followed
- ☐ Water pitchers and cups are within easy reach

Warning signs

- ☐ Food trays left out well past mealtime

THE RESIDENTS

Good signs

- ☐ Hair, faces, hands, and nails are clean
- ☐ Dressed for the time of day, temperature, and season, in clean, well-fitted clothes
- ☐ Taking part in group or independent activities

- ☐ Facility works with the community (libraries, parks, colleges, volunteers)
- ☐ Regular outings

Warning signs

- ☐ Residents in hospital gowns without need, or uncovered and exposed
- ☐ Many residents in bed or "parked" near the nurses' station
- ☐ Many residents asleep or slumped in wheelchairs

Questions You Might Ask

Pick the ones that matter most to you. Write down the answers, and ask the same questions at every place you visit.

Ask the administrator: leadership and staff

- ☐ May I have your cell phone number? What do you expect of yourself and your colleagues when residents and families call, message, or email?
- ☐ How long have you been the administrator here?
- ☐ What ongoing training do you give staff? Can you give recent examples?
- ☐ How do you make sure staff meet your expectations for resident care?
- ☐ What are you doing to keep good staff and bring down turnover?
- ☐ What share of staff are full-time? How often do you use per diem or agency staff?
- ☐ What is your ratio of residents to care staff, including nights and weekends? What about activity staff?
- ☐ How are assignments made? Will the same aides care for me or my loved one consistently?
- ☐ How many hours a week is your medical director here?

Ask the administrator: care and daily life

- ☐ What services are included in the rate? How and when are needs assessed and reassessed? What do added services cost?
- ☐ Here are my needs, preferences, and routines (for example, staying up late or a late breakfast). How will staff meet them?
- ☐ What programs help residents feel a sense of purpose? Are the activities meaningful (gardening, community service, chair yoga) or filler (an "ice cream social")?
- ☐ How do you ask residents about their satisfaction? How do you help residents make their own decisions about care, activities, and surroundings?

- [ ] Is there an independent resident council? What recent resident complaints were resolved?
- [ ] Do you have a family council? May I speak with its leader or members? How else do you support families?
- [ ] How do you coordinate on-site and off-site health care?
- [ ] What safety measures are in place if a resident needs emergency help? When are paramedics called or residents sent to the hospital?
- [ ] How do you prevent and manage COVID and other outbreaks?
- [ ] If relevant: how are roommates matched, and how are conflicts handled?
- [ ] What sets your facility apart for resident quality of life?
- [ ] Are you at full capacity? If not, why? If so, how long is the waiting list?

Ask staff

- [ ] How long have you worked here? Do you work at other facilities too?
- [ ] How many hours a week do you work? Do you ever work double shifts?
- [ ] What professional support does the facility give you?
- [ ] What is most challenging about your job?

Ask residents and families

- [ ] What are the best and worst things about living here?
- [ ] What changes would you like to see?
- [ ] How do you feel about the care, food, staff, leadership, activities, and your ability to make choices for yourself?

Dementia care units

- [ ] How does staff handle disruptive behaviors?
- [ ] How do you monitor residents' nutrition and sleep?
- [ ] Are there separate areas and activities for higher-functioning and lower-functioning residents?

- ☐ What is your policy on communicating with families and representatives?
- ☐ What would lead you to decide a resident is not a good fit, or that you cannot provide the care needed?
- ☐ Who trains staff on dementia-specific care?
- ☐ What is your ratio of residents to care staff, including nights and weekends? What about activity staff?
- ☐ Nursing homes: Is there a separate secured dementia unit? Is it licensed as a Special Care Unit? If not, why not?

Private pay

- ☐ Can I see your fees and rates for the last five years?
- ☐ How much notice do residents and families usually get before a rate increase?
- ☐ What happens when a resident runs out of money?

Before You Decide

Visiting tips

- Go back unannounced, several times. Include mealtimes, evenings, weekends, and shift change (around 3 pm).
- Watch before you are noticed. What are staff doing, and how do they talk to residents? Do they wear name tags? Are they following infection control?
- Talk to people. Speak with current residents and with any family or friends who are visiting. Ask your own friends and acquaintances about their experiences.
- Look at the records. Check the inspection history and ratings for every place you are considering (see the links below).

Before you sign

- Medicaid. Ask whether the facility accepts Medicaid. Ask for a written guarantee that you or your loved one can stay after "spending down" and switching to Medicaid.
- Arbitration. Ask whether you must sign a mandatory pre-dispute arbitration clause to be admitted. "Pre-dispute" means you agree to arbitration before any dispute arises, including abuse or neglect. If possible, choose a facility that does not require it.
- Get it in writing. Ask for the admission agreement and fee schedule to take home and read before you sign anything.
